Hello, my name is Gerald Eaton, but my friends call me Bob. I'm 92 years young and still looking forward to my mail delivery so I can read my Sidelines magazine! I have been reading this magazine since it started and it's definitely a highlight of my day! I'm originally from England, born and raised. I lived on a farm where my love for horses started very early. I came to America 60 years ago. I lived in Canada, working with horses, then relocated to New Jersey where I helped train horses for the USET. I don't ride or train anymore but I still get my horse fix. Thank you, Sidelines!

Wellington realtor and equestrian Martha Jolicoeur appeared in the September issue of Sidelines magazine. Martha, who sponsors the Leading Lady Rider Award during the Winter Equestrian Festival, is an all-around leading lady herself! Check out her homes for sale on the back cover of this issue.

Sidelines can be found all over the country, as proven when we spotted Cody Brown reading the September issue of Sidelines while waiting for his lobster dinner in Maine! Cody reported Sidelines was great and his dinner was delicious.

Olympic dressage rider Debbie McDonald shows off a Sidelines magazine while at Rutledge Farm. Debbie taught a clinic at Rutledge, located in Upperville, Virginia. The farm is home to world-class clinics taught by Olympic and top riders from around the world.

Wally, a Golden retriever, takes a break with Shelby Popp to catch up on their Sidelines reading during the Horse Trials in Archer, Wyoming.

If you missed Yulia Bratkovskaya's story and fashion photo spread in the September issue, then visit the Sidelines website and check it out on our free flipbook. Sidelines also has a free digital app — download it now so you don't miss a single issue.

The ladies at Dover Saddlery in Parker, Colorado, are fans of Sidelines — drop by to visit and pick up a copy of your own.
