Client Spotlight: Megan McDermott

The phrase, "It takes a village," is commonly heard in the equestrian world. From the groom and barn manager to the professional rider, there are multiple individuals who help a horse reach its full potential and continue performing at its best. Although many people may think you only call veterinarian when tragedy strikes, Palm Beach Equine Clinic's (PBEC) team of veterinarians pride themselves on being an integral part of a horse and rider's success. For Megan McDermott, a young show-jumping professional, Palm Beach Equine Clinic's team of professionals has been there every step of the way.

McDermott, who started riding at the age of seven, originally planned to have a career in the film industry after graduating college while continuing to ride as an amateur. However, after a fateful meeting with Daniel Bluman and months under his mentorship, McDermott began spending more time in the saddle and eventually made a full career switch. "I remember my first Winter Equestrian Festival Saturday Night Lights class was a three-star grand prix and at the time, I had just turned pro so I didn't have a trainer," shared McDermott. "Dr. Richard Wheeler of Palm Beach Equine Clinic was the last person to speak to me before I went into the ring and the first person I saw when I came out.

"Not only is he a fantastic veterinarian, but he also acts as an advocate and understands that you're doing this because you love horses and that there's a business aspect to it as well," she continued of her primary veterinarian. "He's able to give phenomenal advice and really understands the rider's perspective. He also understands the trajectory of the horses' careers and at what point they need to peak and is very conscious of your money, your time, and of course, your horses' careers. He's more than just a veterinarian, and I think all his clients feel that their wins are his wins."

During the summer, McDermott spends a lot of her time traveling to different shows in the Northeast, sometimes making it difficult for her horses to be seen by their primary veterinarian. "If Richard can't see me where I am during the summer, he's extremely willing to collaborate with other veterinarians," she noted.

McDermott recalled when her horse Tizimin LS sustained a severe injury while competing at HITS Saugerties in 2018. "Tizi was my first FEI horse, and we shared a really special bond," she commented. "We were competing in a big jumper class and going clear, and then at the last jump, something happened, and his hind end just gave out. At the time, people thought he was going to have to be put down in the ring. It was horrible."
