A Day in the Life With Palm Beach Equine Clinic's Dr. Peter Heidmann

6:30 a.m. – 7:30 a.m.: Family Time/Morning Ritual

I like to start my morning with my two boys who are four and six years old. We get up and play a little before breakfast. We then all load into the car to head to school.

8:00 a.m. – 9:15 a.m.: Hospital Rounds

When I arrive at Palm Beach Equine Clinic, I convene with the hospital staff to discuss the hospitalized patients. There are about 15 horses currently hospitalized with us, though some of them are only here for MRI and bone scans or other outpatient procedures. During rounds, the hospital's patient-care team of veterinarians and technicians make a plan for each patient and debate the best treatment strategies. This is an opportunity to make sure everyone is on the same page with the specific rationale for each treatment plan, and also an opportunity to quiz some of our younger veterinarians on the relevant science.

Today, I got into a good conversation with another senior clinician regarding the ideal choice of blood thinners to limit the risk of clotting in a sick patient. Although we did not totally agree, our diverging opinions provided some perspective to the young veterinarians during rounds. Honestly, even without complete consensus on any given topic, this kind of dialogue challenges us to remain abreast of the medical literature, helps us provide articulate and succinct presentations, and ultimately, promotes optimum patient care.

We also discussed modifying the treatment strategies for a six-year-old stallion who had colic surgery about 18 hours earlier. He was experiencing the all-too-common problem of "post-operative ileus" where the small intestine was not returning to normal motility as quickly as we would like. We increased the regimen of prokinetic drugs, which are IV medications that can help increase the contractions of that sluggish small intestine. We also discussed the possibility of increasing his hand-walking, which can improve his motility.
